THE position of England in Egypt was never stronger than it is at the present moment. In the negotiations between Erance and England with reference to their apheres of influence in Western Africa, it is said the question of Egypt was excluded, and no mention whatever is made of that country in the convention just signed. But the position of England in the Land of the Pharachs must have had some influence on the negotiations. France, to preserve her face, as the Chinese would say, still refuses to openly acquiesce in our predominance, but, with her position in Madagascar consolidated and a vast empire allotted to her in Western Africa, she will become less querulous and will likely allow the Egyptian question to gradually sink into the background. That in some way or other the Anglo-French convention has changed the aspect of things may, we think, be gathered from Lord Salisbury's recent speech at the Mannion House. Never before was he so ontspoken on the subject. He said :- 'As to the future of Egypt, I need not say that it

We have received a letter from Mr P. A. do Rozario, in reference to the treatment of the Portuguese Band on board the Marina. The subject is somewhat old, and we do not think much good would be done by publishing Mr Rozario's letter at this time of day, more especially as it is not very clearly worded. With reg. rd to the charge made for services, he says that there was only a mere mention of an intended debit note, in a letter profesting against Mr Hancock's action towards the Band on the 25th August. ANOTHER GAMBLING CLUB CASE.

TIVE MEN CONVICTED. to:day. Five men who constitute the [Liddon, The Rev. Henry Parry, D.D., management of the Man Wo Matual probably the foremost living preacher of Improvement Society, in Graham Street, the English Church, was born in 1829. were charged with keeping a public gambling house. They appeared very much taking a second-class in Classics. In 1851 shocked and surprised and of course denied he obtained the Johnson Theological the charge. Mr Pollock, instructed by Scholarship and in 1853 proceeded to the Mesus Caldwell and Wilkinson, appearwas, from 1854 to 1859. Vice-Principal of evidence of the usual kind was adduced, but the case was distinguished from that which came before his Worship the other day by the fact that witnesses, hot members of the Club, visited the place, without introduction of any kind. and were allowed to gamble, on the night of the 10th just., when a party of police under Instector Stanton made a raid on Inspector Stanton said he went to the house with Sergeant McIver about 8.3) on the evening in question. A door at the top of the stair was closed against them as they ascended, but was opened immediately afterwards by a district watchman. On getting access to the first floor they saw the defendant in custody. There was the usual gambling parapharnella in the place. A game appeared to have been interrupted when they entered, and money amounting to $5.80 was found on the table. On the second floor there was a fantan table on which they found 813. In each floor there was a set of rules exhibited on the wall. This case had nothing to do with the other one recently heard and disposed of on the 9th inst. Mr Pollock called evidence for the defence with the view of showing that the place was a club and that outsiders were not allowed to gamble there, except when they were introduced by members.

Lau Chin Chu, who was referred to by a previous witness as the manager of the club. said he was the accountant of the esta-Idishment but declined the honour of being called manager. The general public, following telegram from Manila, a copy of the said, were not allowed to visit the club. Shareholders were entitled to introduce visitors. It was nobo by a duty to see that strangers did not enter the club without the N.E. of Luzon, direction N. at 4 p.m. introduction. The shareholders looked after that matter. If visitors were introduced by shareholders they were allowed to gamble if they cho e. There was no formal introduction of visitors. A visitor must always be accompanied by a shareholder. If he came alone he would not be allowed to gamble. He would be asked to leave the place. There had been no profits as yet, the shareholders had had to subscribe to give dinuers and engage girls. The total capital of the club was $1600, subscribed by 22 sharcholders. Generally more than ten shareholders lived on the premises. Similar evidence was given by other sharehold re. Mr Pollock said his Worship laid it down the case which came before him the other day that the essence of public gamblng was that it took place in a house kept for the purpose, to which the public had necess and where they had freedom to gamble. In this case it was not proved that the public at large had access! gapore on the 8th Sept., and may be of conviction, not in the case of acquittal, agents for the plaint ffs in Hongkong, and a sympathetic race. In the decision I gave the other day I stated that before a house could be held to be a public gambling house there must be evidence to show that public gambling had taken place, not merely inferentially from the presence of the people there, but evidence of actual Mr Wodehouse had another gambling gambling by strangers, before a conviction Shanghai community for the hospitable club case to deal with, in the P lice Court | could be obtained. It is still with a deal of hesitation and doub that I deal with the present case As usual there were found in this house club rules, handsome furniture, account books dealing with nothing but ordinary expenses such as provisions and girls and so forth; and there is a disavowal of responsibility on the part of every witness who is called. One witness says one man keeps the books and another says another does it and these two say it is somebody else. There is a shifting and uncertain l tone about the whole of the evidence for the defence which in the matter of credi bility makes it of very pour account indeed. Also when one comes to see what took place on the night of the 10th September one sees that these printed rules, which are vaunted so much, appear to be so many bogeys to frighten the police and are perfectly worthless as far as any practical effect is concerned. On this night, if the evidence is to be believed, no less than ten visitors not connected with the club-of which there are only twenty two shareholders and no other members-made their way into this place without the slightest restraint and gambled or not as they chose.

am aware that there are discrepancies in certain details which may in the eyes of some vitiate the whole testimony of some of the witness a for the prosecution, but these discrepancies are infinitely less than those found in the evid ence for the defence. According to my view of the case, which I admit is very possibly wrong, I think this place was being kept on that night for the purpose of public gaming. As to the prisoners themselves, each of whom was taking a prominent part in the management of the two games which were going on in the place, who were not them. selves gambling, who are shareholders in the place which was supported by the commission on the gambling carried on, I find that they were guilty of permitting persons to play within this public gaming house. and I sentence each of them to six months' imprisonment with hard labour. Mr Pollock - Your Worship, referring to

Lieutenant Turner, who joined the Omaha in April 1838, was, with his wife, who resided in the Club Hotel, well known in Yokohama, and both were much esteemed by a large circle of friends. Mrs Turner was to have gone to the United States with her children by the last mail, starting on the day of the unhappy occurrence. According to original arrangements, her husband should have accompanied her, but it was found impossible to carry out this plan, and the frustration of his expectations is believed to have preyed greatly on the deceased

Since it is impossible to assert that anything contained in an English Act of Parliament is ultra vires, the old state of the law could only be declared to remain unaltered by placing an interpretation upon the clause in the Judicature Act other than that primd facie suggested by the words. Was this possible? Must assuredly it was not impossible, since Acts of Parliament have often been decided to have a meaning very different from that appearing on the surface. The Courts giving such de lisions have, however, always first satisfie them selves that by their interpretation they were giving effect to the true intention of the Legislature. If other parts of the Act or general considerations show clearly that Parliament did not mean to's y what they seem to say, the Judges not only have a right, but are bound to apply the spirit rather than the mere letter of the particular clause. Not the words, but the meaning sought to be conveyed, constitutes the law which the Courts administer. This principle of construction is neither new nor of doubtful acceptance, and it has been specifically laid down by high authority in a passage quoted by the Lord Chanceltor: - The sages of the law heretofere have construed statutes quite contrary, to the letter in some appearance, and those letter they have expounded to extend but to some things, and those which generally prohibit all people from doing such an act. they have interpreted to permit some a whole family of eight, reduced to a Sargent's residence and told the latter of people to do it, and those which include judged to reach to some persons only, which expositions have always been founded on the intent of the Legislature, which they have collected sometimes by considering the cause and necessity of making the Act. sometimes by comparing one part of the Act with another, and sometimes by foreign circumstances. So that they have ever been guided by theintent of the Legislature, which they have always taken according to the necessity of the matter, and according to that which is consonant to reason and good discretion.' That is, a case may be we him the words and yet without the meaning of an Act, or cice versa, without the words but within the meaning No doubt this can in of construction is very strictly limited by the rule that it must never be assumed that the meaning of the Legislature was other than that primd focie meaning conveyed by policy or wisdom of Acts of Parliament. only consider the latent intention of a statute when they are compelled to do so by a doubt as to how that statute is to be applied. Was it, then, intended by the Legislature that decisions on a writ of habeas corpus should be subject to appeal? The determination of this point depends upon the validity of a comparatively simple contention. Lord Bramwell's judgment put this contention with great force and perspiculty. It is clear that Parliament did not intend to create an appeal, because if it had, some particular provisions as to the procedure to be observed would have been inserted in the Act. The omission to do so is conclusive that its intention was other than that appearing prime ficie from the words. Of course, as Lord Bramwell says, 'if the statute in express terms said the appeal should lie, it must be obeyed. But when the questi n is one of constructi n, anrely it is a good argument to show that a particular cons ruction would
